

Business and Administration Intermediate Apprentice:

Dominic Woodbridge, House of Commons, London.

Dominic Woodbridge is an administration apprentice working for MP Sajid Javid, who during a recent reshuffle has been promoted to the position of Economic Secretary to the Treasury.

"I completed my 'A levels' in 2011 and engaged with Hawk Training prior to my exams as I was keen to progress into employment via an Apprenticeship on leaving school, rather than going to University.

My first three months were spent being introduced to the Parliamentary calendar and associated deadlines. I have visited the constituency on several occasions to gain a clear understanding of the environment and the people Sajid represents.

I am responsible for the management of request for appointments with Sajid. As soon as his promotion was announced, his diary commitments and requests for meetings with him quadrupled.

I regularly return to my 6th form speaking at assemblies to highlight awareness of apprenticeships. During National Apprenticeship Week 2012, I arranged a tour of the House of Commons for year 12 pupils introducing them to members of the House and explaining the variety of my role.

I am in regular communication with the Chancellors office and have helped them on several occasions to organise evening events." Economic Secretary to the Treasury, Sajid Javid said, "Dominic is an exemplary example of everything that an apprentice should be. Since joining my office over a year ago, Dominic has quickly proven himself to be an extremely capable young man. He has a range of core duties to carry out every day, in addition to many tasks that only come about at the last minute.

I admire his maturity in deciding that he would rather pursue professional experience instead of further study at university. He approaches his work conscientiously and his dedication to learning and improving himself while at work is clear."
